

Traffic Lights and Road Signs

1 Types and Meaning of Traffic Lights

Types of Traffic Lights	Meaning of Traffic Lights
Green light 	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> (1) Pedestrians can proceed. (2) Vehicles excluding light road vehicles and streetcars can go straight or turn right or left. However, motorized bicycles that turn right via two-stage right turns can go straight until the point where they turn right and change their direction at the point. (3) Light road vehicles (including bicycles and carts) can go straight or turn left. When they turn right, they can go straight until the point where they turn right and change their direction at the point.
Yellow light 	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> (1) Pedestrians must not start crossing a road. When they are crossing the road, they must finish crossing the road promptly or stop crossing it and go back. (2) Vehicles and streetcars must not proceed beyond their stopping point. However, if they are approaching their stopping point when the traffic light has turned yellow and cannot stop safely, they can continue to proceed.
Red light 	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> (1) Pedestrians must not cross a road. (2) Vehicles and streetcars must not proceed beyond their stopping point. (3) Vehicles and streetcars that are already turning left at an intersection can continue to proceed, even if the traffic light for the road they are entering by turning left is red. (4) Vehicles and streetcars that are already turning right at an intersection can continue to proceed, even if the traffic light for the road they are entering by turning right is red. In this case, the vehicles and streetcars must not obstruct vehicles and streetcars from proceeding at a green light. However, light road vehicles and motorized bicycles that turn right via two-stage right turns must stop at the point where they are turning right when the traffic light for the road they are entering by turning right is red.
Green-lighted arrow 	Vehicles can proceed in the direction of the arrow even if the traffic light is yellow or red (in cases where the arrow is a right arrow, they can also make a U-turn). However, light road vehicles and motorized bicycles that turn right via two-stage right turns must not proceed if the arrow is a right arrow.
Yellow-lighted arrow 	While streetcars can proceed in the direction of the arrow even if the traffic light is yellow or red, pedestrians and vehicles must not proceed.
